

Director of Research U.S. Army War College

---

The U.S. Army War College seeks a Director of Research to organize and energize research and publication. This member of the War College's faculty will be part of the Strategic Studies Institute (SSI) and be a key assistant to the Director of the Strategic Studies Institute who is charged with leading the College's research and publication efforts.

The Director of Research will serve as a mentor to other members of the faculty and staff, and War College students who seek to publish their research; recruit external authors to write for the Strategic Studies Institute, select suitable manuscripts, and manage the publication of the work of these authors; manage research-related programs like the External Research Associates Program and the Key Strategic Issues List; develop and publish a quarterly Army War College Research and Publication Newsletter; manage other committees and programs to optimize research and publication; and advise the Director of the Strategic Studies Institute on methods to make research and publication more effective within SSI and across the Army War College. In addition, he or she will continue their own research and publication in a field related to the mission of the U.S. Army War College.

The U.S. Army War College is located in Carlisle, Pennsylvania, a small, historic town 20 miles west of Harrisburg, the state capital. It is within an easy drive of many recreational, artistic, and shopping opportunities including Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Hershey, Gettysburg Battlefield, and the Amish country. The region abounds with outstanding outdoor activities. Local public schools are considered very good. For more information on the area see <http://www.visithhc.com/carcity.shtml>.

The successful candidate for this position must have in-depth knowledge of the literature dealing with national security policy, military strategy, and strategic leadership, as well as the procedures for successful publication in these venues. A demonstrated understanding of national security, strategic leadership, and military strategy issues, their impact on the Army, and the research methodology needed to analyze relevant issues is also required. Serious consideration also requires well-established contacts throughout the national security studies community; leadership, managerial and interpersonal communications skills; and extensive strategic research experience and a substantial record of successful publication. An advanced degree in a discipline relevant to the mission of the U.S. Army War College; a doctorate in a discipline relevant to the mission of the U.S. Army War College; and information technology skills that would promote the War College's expansion into new information markets and new forms of publication electronically are all highly desirable.

Salary is negotiable. Research professors are excepted service government employees with renewable contracts averaging three years. The first year of service is probationary. The War College also provides relocation assistance.

To apply, mail a curriculum vitae or resume, which addresses knowledge skills and abilities along with one recent publication to:

Director of Research Search Committee
ATTN: LTC Raymond Millen
Strategic Studies Institute
U.S. Army War College
Carlisle Barracks, PA 17013-5244
Phone: 717 245-4086 fax 717 245-3820
Email raymond.millen@carlisle.army.mil

LTC Raymond Millen can answer any questions about the position or the Strategic Studies Institute. The application period is from 20 February to 02 April 2004. Material received after that date or not requested cannot be considered.

